Hay is firm, under the extremely high prices of other feed, and the fact that the new crop is late and light in many scetions. Straw is very steady. Millfeed is well sustained. Hay, $146/18; fancy and jobbing, $18.500720; rye straw, $17@18e; oat straw, $11@12.

The pork position continues very firm, with ribs and several items higher for this market.

The beef position is a stronger one, with cattle having reached the highest price noted for a period of several years, if ever before, $8.40 per 100 lbs live weight. Here the market is unsatisfactory, with dealers declaring that prices will have to advance and 12 | August @13e per lb is set for the best sides. Millers' agents here have reports from January the winter wheat mills, saying that the new grain is light, while the quantity grown is much smaller than anticipated. The winter wheat millers are finding it hard to get wheat to grind. The spring wheat is making fair progress, but the season is cold and keeps the plant back.

The flour market is firm in tone, on the stronger wheat market, but trade continues quiet. Buyers are indifferent as to the chances of a stronger market later, and are contented to take only their immediate wants. Agents believe in a continued strong market, but not in any very great advance at present.

Corn advanced to the highest point of the crop, and has been well sustained at that point.

Oats are under pretty much the same weather conditions as corn, only that the crop is nearer to harvesting, with a great growth. The crop is late, reports from the earlier sections intimuting
